TABLE OF CONTENTS.

STATISTICS OF POPULATION.

Population of Iowa, 1895, according to age and sex, with comparisons with total population of 1890 and 1885, by townships, towns, cities and city wards. The first column gives the population of the township, including cities and towns; all others the population of the townships exclusive of cities and towns 1–81

Population according to color and sex, marriage relation and parentage 82–162

TABLE No. 3.

Showing the number of dwellings and families, persons subject to military duty, persons entitled to vote at general elections, persons who cannot read and write, children over six and under seventeen years not attending school, foreigners not naturalized, number of births and deaths, and the number of deaf and dumb, blind and insane not in state institutions 163–240

Population according to age and sex, with comparisons with population of 1890 and 1885, by counties 241–243

TABLE No. 5.

Population according to color and sex, marriage relation, and parentage, by counties 244–246

TABLE No. 6.

Showing by counties the number of dwellings and families; persons subject to military duty, entitled to vote at general elections, and who cannot read and write; children over six and under seventeen years not attending school; foreigners not naturalized; number of births and deaths, and the number of deaf and dumb, blind and insane not in state institutions 247–249

TABLE No. 7.

Population of cities according to age and sex, with comparisons with population of 1890 and 1885 250–251

Population of cities according to color and sex, marriage relation and parentage 252–253

TABLE No. 9.

Showing the number of dwellings and families; persons subject to military duty, entitled to vote at general elections, and who cannot read and write; children over six and under seventeen years not attending school; foreigners not naturalized; number of births and deaths, and the number of deaf and dumb, blind and insane not in state institutions, in cities of 2,000 inhabitants or over 254–256

TABLE No. 10.

Showing the population of the several counties of the territory and state of Iowa at each enumeration since the organization of the territory of Wisconsin 258–261

TABLE No. 11.

Showing the per cent of increase of population of the several counties at each enumeration as compared with the last previous enumeration, and for the last three decades. Where the numerals are preceded by (–) it shows a decrease of population 262–264

TABLE No. 12.

Showing the population of cities and towns having a population of 1,000 inhabitants and over, January 1, 1895, at each enumeration since 1850 265–268

TABLE No. 13.

Showing the population of cities and towns of 1,000 inhabitants and upward at each enumeration from 1875 to 1895, and the per cent of increase or decrease of population at each enumeration as compared with the last previous enumeration, and by decades. Where numerals are preceded by (–) it shows a decrease of population 269–271

TABLE No. 14.

Showing by counties the total number of dwellings and families and the number of persons to a dwelling and family, the percentage of males and females, and the native and foreign born persons to the total population 272–274

TABLE No. 15

Showing in cities of 2,000 inhabitants and upward the total number of dwellings and families and the number of persons to a family; the percentage of males and females, and of native and foreign born persons to the total population 275–277

TABLE No. 16.

Showing the total population, urban population, and per cent of urban to total population of the several counties of the state 278

INTRODUCTION.

In presenting to the state the fifteenth census of the state of Iowa, the executive council recognizes the vast benefit that has been derived from the various improvements adopted and carried out by the census heretofore taken. Each census has been in many particulars an improvement over former ones, until finally it is believed that the fifteenth census is as near perfect as a compilation can be under our present law.

The fourteenth census was an experiment along the line of changing former methods, which before that time had consisted in taking an abstract of all parts of the census from the ninety-nine county auditors, instead of taking a certified copy of the sheets from each census taker. The executive council, however, in 1885 only applied this changed method to the enumeration, leaving the more important and more complicated matters of farm products, manufactures, mines and other important matters to be taken under the old method of an abstract from each county auditor.

For the purpose of accuracy, and simply as an experiment, the executive council in 1885 decided to require a certified copy from each assessor, so far as the enumeration was concerned, to be sent to the secretary of state, and there compiled. In their report in the introductory of said census, they speak of the new method as follows:

> The unsatisfactory results obtained by the council in 1875, under the plan which it reluctantly followed, of having the assessors' returns abstracted by the county auditors, impressed the council with the importance of very carefully considering the propriety of adopting a different method. It was finally decided to require assessors to make duplicate schedules of the returns as to population, one copy to be forwarded by the county auditors to the secretary of state, and the statistics to be compiled under his direction; the statistics as to the productions and resources of the state to be gathered as before, i. e., by having the county auditors make abstracts from the assessors' returns, from which abstracts the compilation should be made under the direction of the secretary of state. This was only a half step, but being largely an experiment, was all the council felt justified in taking. The results are in the highest degree satisfactory, and afford the most ample proof of the wisdom of having the entire compilation made under the supervision of one person.

Profiting by the experiments of the executive council in 1885, the executive council by unanimous vote decided that the secretary of state should require assessors to make duplicate schedules of the returns, not only as to population, but as to the productions and resources of the state, which duplicate should be forwarded by the auditors to the secretary of state, thus placing under the charge of the secretary of state the entire compilation of all parts of the census. This experiment has been carefully made, and is in the highest degree satisfactory, and the council feel justified in stating, without fear that the result will contradict the statement, that the present census is as perfect as can be made under our present law. A duplicate of the sheets, filled out by every census taker in the state, was transmitted to the secretary of state, where, under the personal supervision of experts, the compilations were made, and not only were the apparent mistakes and discrepancies corrected, but every figure and every item in every sheet was submitted to the closest scrutiny, so that it is believed the matter contained in the fifteenth census is entirely reliable.

Of course this has necessitated a heavy outlay of money from the state, as a large clerical force was required at the capitol to compile the statistics from the assessors' returns, which under the old plan would have been simplified and greatly reduced by each auditor furnishing the secretary with an abstract compiled and prepared by a clerical force in his office; but in reviewing the work of the council in 1875, and discovering the inaccuracies and mistakes amounting sometimes to the ludicrous, it is believed that the people of the state will be more than willing to pay the extra amount for the assured reliability of the census. In fact, while as an immediate outlay it has cost the state more money than would the old method, it is confidently believed that under the old method it would have cost equally as much, the extra expense being transferred to the auditor's office and paid there out of the county funds, instead of having been made in the secretary's office and paid out of the state funds, so that to the whole people of the state the cost of the present work is perhaps less than it would have been had the council pursued the old method. To illustrate the work that has been corrected in the present census, we quote from the report of the executive council in 1885, when speaking of the difficulties under which they labored in getting an exact census of the products of the state as compared with the exactness of the work in the census proper, which was sent to them in duplicate. The council in discussing this quote us the following:

> It is a matter of regret that the figures relating to the resources and productions of the state do not justify a similar degree of credence. This is, without question, largely due to the fact that the compiling of these statistics was left to the ninety-nine county auditors of the state, instead of being done entirely under the supervision of one person, as in the case of the population statistics. To illustrate: The abstract from one county showed the number of domestic grape vines in a certain township to be 784, the product of which, for 1884, was put down at 90,550 pounds of fruit, or an average of over 115 pounds to the vine. The number of sheep in one township appears to be 31; the value of same, $20,106.50, or $648.59 per head. In many townships a large valuation was reported with no corresponding number of articles, head of stock, etc., to which the valuation refers. These discrepancies and absurdities are not confined to any class of items, but are so numerous as to seriously discredit the greater part of the agricultural statistics. Of course every possible effort was made to have all such errors corrected, but the difficulties encountered in attempting to get back of the ninety-nine county auditors' abstracts may be easily imagined. Had the secretary of state been in possession of the assessors' schedules, showing the figures as to each farm separately, it will be readily seen that the methods of verification, employed to such good purpose on the population tables, could have been applied with equal advantage in getting rid of the errors above instanced.

In the present instance we had this advantage, which is referred to in the above paragraph, and it would be possible to enumerate hundreds of instances of as glaring errors and mistakes which were corrected, as are cited above. Having the sheet of the particular assessor in the possession of the supervisor of the census, where no correction could be made of the matter, it was returned with the inconsistencies and mistakes pointed out, and the assessor himself was enabled to make the corrections and get the matter as near correct as possible. This has been done in cases almost without number.

It was also possible to make corrections by footing various columns of figures, and proving the one by the other, so that one of the great items of work in preparing and compiling the present census was making each column of figures prove itself by every other column of figures on the same sheet to which it was related. Thus it has been possible to get an exact census. It is believed by the council that the present experiment has been so successful that no future council will think of going back to the old method of receiving abstracts from the county auditors. In fact, it is recommended that our census laws be so changed as to embody the substance of what the council has, in the present instance, carried out practically.

Another fact that the council feels called upon to present is an important one, relating to the former reputation of Iowa as a producing state. The year 1894, upon which the census of 1895 is based, was the first year in the history of Iowa when an almost total failure of crops occurred. This being the case, of course the yield of the various products given to Iowa as set out in the present census, is very misleading to those who are not familiar with the fact announced, and in order that this may as far as possible be corrected, it is thought best to append hereto a table, showing the yield of corn and oats in the years 1893 and 1895, the year before and the year after the year upon which the present census is based. Corn, oats and hay being three of the principal crop products of Iowa, it will be seen how great are the embarrassments of gaining from our present census an adequate idea of the average yield of the various crops in Iowa.

TABLE.

Year.	Corn.	Oats.
1893	214,804,758	100,742,852
1894	128,989,047	107,691,460
1895	285,000,000	201,600,000

It is hoped that the views of the council and systems herein contained will not be misunderstood. There is no disposition to either criticise or discredit the faithful work heretofore done by the township assessors of the state in obtaining the material for the various reports, or the auditors in the performance of their share of the work. The council simply desire to emphasize the fact that the whole scheme brought under the supervision of one efficient superintendent can be made more accurate than to be left to ninety-nine auditors, with assistants they might be able to pick up either in their own office or in their own counties, without any special skill for the work.

The council has been enabled to secure the services of skilled statisticians, many of whom had experience in former census work, and some in the census department of the United States, and it is probably due to the assessors of the state to say that they are fully as able, as a body, as the census takers appointed in 1890 by the United States government.

It would be unjust also for the council to neglect to mention the invaluable services of Capt. Frank E. Landers, the present clerk of the executive council, who was appointed as supervisor of the census. To his careful, efficient work, his painstaking and untiring efforts, a great deal of the good features of the present census is due. He is a statistician by instinct and by experience, and has been enabled to give the state a great deal of valuable experience and ability that is rarely obtained in such positions.
